The Rules

1. Read the false statement that is handed to you, e.g.

Scalia is the region of Northern Europe consisting mainly of Norway, Sweden, and Finland.

2. Give the word that fits the definition you were given, in the format "You're thinking of...", e.g.

You're thinking of Scandinavia.

(If you have no idea what the person was thinking of, ask them.)

3. Come up with another false statement about the same candidate's name, defining an actual word that sounds or reads similarly, thus creating a clue for the next player. You can loosely approximate the spelling or the pronunciation of the original name, but don't stray too far. For example:

Scalia is a type of triangle where no two sides have the same length

(If you have absolutely no idea for a new word, you can skip your turn.)

4. Pass the paper to your left, get a paper from your right. Read all the entries up to the last one, and go back to #2.

If time permits and you're inspired you can continue some of those on the back of the page.

When time is up, ask for blue tape, and post the winner of your primary on the wall for everyone's merriment.
